PARIS TREATY SILENT ON FRENCH LANGUAGE

By FRED WILLIAMS

Viscount Bennett erred when in his speech at Toronto on Oct. 31 he asserted that the Treaty of Paris of 1763 guaranteed the laws, the language and the religion of the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec (which meant all Canada). It is amazing that so erudite a lawyer as Lord Bennett should make such a blunder.

It has been clearly proved that the use of the French language was not mentioned in the treaty. The French language was never promised in any treaty. Neither in the terms of capitulation of Quebec, Sept. 18, 1759; in those at the capitulation of Montreal, Sept. 8, 1760, nor in the Treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, is there any mention of the use of the French language, much less its official recognition on a parity with English.

It is true that in 1765 the Lords of the Council sent instructions for the publication of ordinances in French, but this was a concession, not a treaty right. These statements are made on the authority of the late W. J. White, K.C., a former batonnier of the Bar of Montreal.

The French language was allowed in the first Legislature of Lower Canada in 1792, but when the Province of Canada was formed in 1840 a ban was put upon the use of French. This continued until 1847, when French was again made an official language. This was ratified by the British North America Act, 1867. It was a concession won by French-Canadian legislators, but was never incorporated in any treaty.
